War Legislation of the Year.

WE FINISH printing this week the statutes of the past year. A large number of them have been Emergency Statutes, and since their importance is immediate and temporary we have endeavoured, so far as space permitted, to print them as soon as they have been issued by the King's Printer; and where the whole could not be printed at once, we have given the preference to those of special urgency. The past statute year commenced with the sitting of Parliament in November, 1914, and the War Statutes include many which at once became familiar, such as the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act (5 Geo. 5, c. 8), and the later Amending Acts, c. 34 (restricting trial by court martial), c. 37 (production of war material), and 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 42 (control of liquor trade); the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Acts (5 Geo. 5, c. 12, and 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 79); the Execution of Trusts (War Facilities) Act, 1914, and the Amending Act (5 Geo. 5, c. 13, and 5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 70); the Ministry of Munitions Act and Munitions of War Act (cc. 51, 54); the National Registration Act (c. 60); and the Elections and Registration Act (c. 76).

Ordinary Legislation.

ORDINARY LEGISLATION has been in the main at a standstill during the year, but just as the Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Consolidation Acts managed to get on the Statute Book last year, so the present year sees a measure of consolidation in the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915 (c. 66), though its operation is postponed to a date after the termination of the war to be fixed by the Local Government Board. Other measures of importance are the Marriage of British Subjects (Facilities) Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo. 5, c. 40), which facilitates marriages between British subjects resident in the United Kingdom and such subjects resident in other parts of the British Dominions or in British Protectorates; the Statutory Companies (Redeemable Stock) Act, 1915 (c. 44), which provides for preference or debenture stock of statutory companies being made redeemable on terms to be defined by special resolution; the Fisheries Harbours Act, 1915 (c. 48), which facilitates the improvement, management and maintenance of small harbours principally used by the fishing industry; and the Notification of Births (Extension) Act, 1915 (c. 64), which makes the Notification of Births Act, 1907, of general application and introduces further provision for the care of mothers and young children.

Insurance against Aircraft.

A CORRESPONDENT, whose letter we print elsewhere, raises a question as to the liability, as between lessor and lessee, to insure against damage by aircraft where the lessee is under a covenant to repair. We made some observations recently (ante, p. 592) on the matter of aircraft insurance generally, and we there suggested that, under an absolute covenant to repair, the liability to repair in case of destruction by hostile aircraft would be on the lessee, and this appears to be correct. In the old case of Paradine v. Jane (1648, Aleyn, 26), the defendant to a claim for rent pleaded that "a certain German prince, by name Prince RUPERT, an alien born, enemy to the King and Kingdom, had invaded the realm with an hostile army of men," and had evicted him; but the Court of King's Bench was against the lessee, and a distinction was taken between duties created by law, such as repair of waste; here, if a house is destroyed by tempest or enemies, the lessee is excused; and liabilities undertaken by contract. "When the party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract." This has been frequently recognized as good law; see, for example, Lloyd v. Guibert (L. R. 1 Q. B., p. 121; Jacobs v. Crédit Lyonnais (12 Q. B. D., p. 603). It is treated as a leading case by Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK (Contract, 8th ed., p. 432, and see Laws of England, vol. 7, p. 427), and it must, we think, be taken to govern liability for damage by or in consequence of hostile aircraft. The lessee's covenants are not likely to include a covenant to insure against such an event, and the lessor cannot strictly call upon the lessee to effect the insurance; but he can point out that in the event of loss the lessee will be liable. Where the covenant contains an exception of damage by "fire, storm, or tempest or other inevitable accident" (see Manchester Bonded Warehouse Co. v. Carr, 5 C. P. D. 507), the case would seem to be within the words "inevitable accident."

Dissolution of Contracts by War.

It is now well-settled law that where an ante bellum contract with an alien enemy of a continuing nature is such that further performance of the promises contained in it is in the nature of trading with the enemy, and so becomes illegal on the outbreak of hostilities, then the contract is dissolved altogether; but if that event does not render any stipulation illegal—as in life insurance contracts—then the contract is merely suspended until the termination of the war: Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines (1902, A. C., at p. 509), Esposito v. Bowden (7 E. & B., at p. 781). But suppose an ante bellum contract which involves trading with the enemy expressly stipulates that the contract is to be suspended on the outbreak of war between the sovereigns of the respective parties. In such a case it seems that there is, during the continuance of the war, no stipulation in the contract which involves trading with the enemy, and consequently nothing illegal; and in accordance with the principle just referred to it might be expected that the contract would be merely suspended and not dissolved. This view appears to have been accepted as correct by BRAY, J., in the recent case of Zinc Corporation (Limited) v. Aron Hirsch & Sohn (Times, 8th inst.), although on the actual facts of that case he held that it did not apply, and decided for a dissolution of the contract. The plaintiffs were the successors in title of an Australian firm who, in 1908, entered into a running contract to supply the defendants, a German firm, with a large quantity of zinc ores—a material of great value in war. But the contract contained a clause which provided for its suspension in the following events:—

In the event of any strike, lock-out, combination of workmen, interference of trade unions, suspension of labour whether partial, local, or general, and from whatever cause arising, floods, storms, fires, stoppage of water supply, washaways of railways, accidents, acts of God, force majeure, or perils of the sea, breakdown of machinery, or inability of the Silverton Tramway Co. to provide the necessary trucks for taking away the concentrates, or in the event of any cause beyond the control of either the sellers or the buyers preventing or delaying the carrying out of this agreement, then this agreement shall be suspended during the continuance of any and every such disability.

It was argued for the defendants that the words force majeure included hostilities between the sovereigns of the vendors and purchasers, and provided for suspension of all trading on the happening of such an event. But on the ejusdem generis principle of construction it seems difficult to give this well-known term any such meaning. And it is significant that the usual term to cover hostilities between states, namely "Restraint of Princes," is absent from the clause. For this reason Mr. Justice BRAY held that the terms of the contract required performance of its obligations during the continuance of the war—a performance which involves illegality and so dissolves the contract.

Mortgagees and the Rate of Interest.

It was probably not foreseen by the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he launched his £4 10s. per cent. War Loan that the effect would be to make lenders who had been in contented receipt of a lower rate of interest suddenly yearn for an increase; but we understand that many mortgagees saw their opportunity, and were prompt to seize it, and pressure was put upon mortgagors to consent to the rate fixed by the mortgage being raised. In default of consent the mortgage was to be called in. We do not know whether mortgagees have generally yielded to a demand which prima facie seems very oppressive. When the money was lent the mortgagees stipulated for a rate of interest which satisfied him, and the fact that public troubles have led to a rise in the Government rate is no reason for their seeking to go behind the bargain. Mortgagors and mortgagees alike are probably not persons who are receiving increased wages or war bonuses, and the desire of the mortgagees to get a bit more is probably balanced by the reluctance of the mortgagors to pay it. As a matter of fact, the position of the mortgagee is not so strong as he would like to make it appear. Between calling in his money and having the cash ready for investment in a more attractive security there is a wide interval, and though he can put the mortgagor to a good deal of trouble, he will not find it easy to realise his security. It will, it is very likely, be a safe policy for the mortgagor to be firm and refuse to give the increased interest. But the whole thing is an unfortunate outcome of the financial position, and reasonable mortgagees will not, we think, put their mortgagors in this predicament. If, however, such a course is generally adopted, there would be a strong case for protecting mortgagors by a new emergency measure.

Agency Between English and Irish Solicitors.

ATTENTION is called by correspondents whose letter we print elsewhere to the recent Irish case of Porter v. Kirtlan (49 Ir. L. T. Rep. 161) on agency terms as between English and Irish solicitors. The action, which was heard by Mr. Justice DODD, was brought by an Irish solicitor against an English solicitor to recover his costs of an action which he had brought in Ireland on the instructions of the English solicitor. According to the ordinary rule of principal and agent in such a case, the Irish solicitor would have to sue the client. The English solicitor would be an agent acting for a disclosed principal, and the principal would be liable. But as between a country solicitor and his agent in London, and generally where one solicitor in England employs another in this country to do any business, this rule is by custom excluded, and the employed solicitor looks only to the employing solicitor for payment. "It is a common practice," it was said in Serace v. Whittington (2 B. & C., p. 13), "for one attorney to do business for another. The attorney for whom the business is done generally makes the other some allowance out of the profits. The attorney who does the business invariably gives credit to the attorney who employs him, and not to the client for whose benefit it is done."

But in Hyndman v. Ward (43 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, p. 246), though it was recognised that this was the custom as between English solicitors, it was held that the county court judge before whom that case first came held rightly, on the evidence before him, that this custom did not prevail as between English and Irish solicitors. The evidence there, however, seems to have been unsatisfactory, and a different result has been reached in the present Irish case. Evidence was given before Mr. Justice DODD by Sir JOHN LYNCH and Mr. W. S. HAYES, both past Presidents of the Incorporated Law Society of Ireland, and Mr. R. BLAIR

WHITE, a past Vice-President, to the effect that "a recognized custom or practice existed whereby under circumstances similar to those of the present case the Irish solicitor was, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, entitled to look to the English solicitor for his costs, and to hold him personally responsible therefor." They also gave evidence that it was the custom for the Irish solicitor to allow the English solicitor one-third of the profit costs. The only witness for the defendant was his solicitor, who disclaimed knowledge of the custom so far as his experience went.

As a matter of convenience and principle it seems clear that the custom should apply as between English and Irish solicitors. As the learned judge pointed out, if the Irish solicitor is not to look to the English solicitor instructing him, and vice versa, then no steps can be taken until the instructed solicitor has assured himself as to the financial position of his client; but we doubt whether the instructing solicitor intends that he should do this. The instructing solicitor takes that duty upon himself, and when he sends the instructions to the sister country he desires that they shall be acted on forthwith. This means that he makes himself responsible, and in return he shares the profits. Accordingly, DODD, J., held that the custom was proved, and he stated it in the following terms:—

Where an English solicitor instructs, on behalf of an English client, an Irish solicitor to take proceedings in an Irish Court, or to act professionally for him in any matter, or conversely, where an Irish solicitor instructs an English solicitor to take proceedings for an Irish client in an English Court, or to act professionally for him in any matter, there being no express agreement contravening the custom, the solicitor who acts upon the instructions is entitled to recover from the solicitor who gives the instructions the entire sums reasonably and properly spent on outlay, and two-thirds of the sum reasonably and properly incurred for professional services.

Internment of Alien Enemies

THE legal position of civilians in this country who, while ceasing, in fact, to be German, have not acquired British nationality has again been raised, and in Re Liebmann (Times, 7th inst.) an important judgment has been pronounced by a Divisional Court consisting of BAILHACHE and LOW, JJ.

LIEBMANN was born at Mannheim in 1868, being by descent a subject of Germany. In 1889 he came to England on business, in 1890 obtained a formal discharge from German nationality, but did not take out letters of naturalization in England, and in this country he has ever since resided and carried on business. In August, 1914, he registered as an alien enemy for reasons of abundanti cautela, since he had lost his discharge, and feared that he would be unable to prove his renunciation of German citizenship. Later on he found the document and applied unsuccessfully for exemption from registration. Recently he applied, again without success, to the Home Office Advisory Committee for exemption from internment under the recent order of the Home Office. In August of this year he received from the superintendent of Vine street Police-station the usual notice, sent by authority of the Secretary of State, informing him that he was about to be interned, and in due course there followed his arrest and internment. To contest the legality of these proceedings and to vindicate his liberty he applied for a writ of habeas corpus, and the matter came last week before a Divisional Court composed of BAILHACHE and LOW, JJ.

Two possible courses were open to the Solicitor-General, who represented the Secretary of State at this hearing. He could either shew cause for the imprisonment of LIEBMANN, i.e., admit the fact of imprisonment and justify it on the ground of some common law or statutory right vested in the Crown; or he could take a preliminary objection to the applicant's locus standi altogether on the ground that the applicant was an alien enemy, and as such not entitled to appear in our courts. The Solicitor-General adopted this latter course and succeeded, so that no decision as to the rights of the Crown was given on the main issue; but, in fact, all points were argued more or less fully on the hearing of the preliminary objection, so that the difference of procedure was only nominal.

Now, as Mr. Justice LOW put it in a singularly lucid judgment, the Court had three points before it. The Crown contended (1) that the applicant was an alien enemy, (2) that by internment he had become a prisoner of war, and (3) that the Crown is entitled by virtue of its prerogative in time of war to imprison any person it pleases if it considers such course necessary for the defence of the realm, in which case no writ of habeas corpus will run while war lasts. Success on any one of these points would be sufficient, but, in fact, it was the second point on which the Court based its decision. As regards the third, while refusing to decide it, the Court very naturally intimated that it felt great repugnance to recognizing so wide a power.

As regards the first point, that LIEBMANN was an alien enemy, the Court had simply to follow a recent decision of the Court of Appeal: Ex parte Weber (ante, p. 692). In that case the applicant for a writ of habeas corpus was a German who, according to German law, had lost his nationality by long absence from his country, but under a recent German statute could take proceedings to regain it if he returned to Germany. The Court of Appeal held that, for purposes of English law, he must be regarded as German—the status of "no nationality" is unknown to our law. LIEBMANN was in the same boat as WEBER, except that he had obtained twenty-five years ago a formal release from German nationality; but this release operates only in the municipal law of Germany, and not in that of England nor in International law, where, according to the better opinion, everyone must have a nationality. Hence LIEBMANN was an alien enemy. But at common law an alien enemy can neither sue nor obtain the remedy of habeas corpus unless he resides here sub domini regis protectione. Registration of an alien enemy under the Aliens Restriction Act, 1914, and Orders is equivalent to a licence to reside here, and confers this protection and all ancillary rights: Princess Thurn and Taxis v. Moffitt (ante, p. 26; 1915, 1 Ch. 58). But the licence, said LOW, J., is revocable at any time by the Crown, and the order of internment in LIEBMANN's case must be regarded as an implied revocation of the licence to reside conferred by registration. Hence LIEBMANN reverted to his common status of an outlaw, and could not ask for the protection of the Court, though of course the imprisonment of civilian enemies is a retrograde step, whether justified by present circumstances we need not here inquire.

Although, however, Mr. Justice LOW intimated his determination of the first point in the way we have summarized, the Court preferred to base its decision on the second—which in our view is much more doubtful. It held LIEBMANN to be a prisoner of war; and of course there is abundant authority that a prisoner of war, whether enemy or neutral, cannot apply for a writ of habeas corpus (Three Spanish Sailors case, 1779, 2 Wm. Bl. 1324). But how can a civilian (other than a spy) be regarded as a "prisoner of war." The idea seems a contradiction in terms. Both judges, however, found to the apparent difficulty an ingenious answer. They took judicial notice of the changes in modern warfare, especially as waged by Germany. They concluded from their survey of these changes that civilians residing in a hostile country are of great belligerent value to their national sovereign by sending information of enemy movements, by signalling, and by promoting strikes, disturbances, and unrest in the civilian population. These are military functions, and when the Executive Government chooses to arrest any alien enemy on the ground that he is performing these military functions, the Court cannot inquire into the correctness or bona fides of its action. In other words, they applied to this case the well known plea, "Act of State," upheld in Salaman v. Indian Secretary (1906, 1 K. B. 613), where the Court of Appeal held that it had no jurisdiction to question acts of the Indian Government confiscating the private property of a native ruler in a protected State, provided the Government represented such confiscation to be an arbitrary act of Executive Authority against that ruler in his capacity as a foreigner; and lucidly analysed in Hemchand Dechand v. Azam Sakarlal Chhotamlal (1906, A. C. 217). The detention of an interned alien converts him into a prisoner of war, and is an "Act of State" into which no Court has jurisdiction to inquire. But it may be suggested that, notwithstanding Germany's military excesses and barbarity, the judgments give a somewhat bold extension to the doctrine of judicial notice. What is the real evidence against LIEBMANN, and others like him, who have been practically English for many years?

On the third point argued for the Crown, the alleged right of the Executive Government to arrest and detain on grounds of the public safety any person whatever by virtue of the prerogative as extended in times of war, the Court was not in sympathy with the contention of the Solicitor-General, and the use of the prerogative would virtually overrule the Habeas Corpus Acts as against the Crown in times of war. It can only be defended by extending to unwarrantable lengths the much-criticized rule laid down by the Judicial Committee in Ex parte Marais (1902, A. C. 109), that while a country is the scene of war the civil courts, although sitting in the theatre of military operations, cannot question the acts of courts martial until the war has terminated. To justify such an extension would be to destroy the distinction between constitutional and despotic Government.

Death Duties (Killed in War) Act, 1914.

[To the Editor of the Solicitors' Journal and Weekly Reporter.]

Sir,—Your note in this week's issue explains matters very clearly. We were wrong in our view and owe the Inland Revenue Authorities an apology.

The numerous complaints which we heard in reference to the requirement in question induced us to raise the point.

It would seem desirable that an official notice should be issued stating that the consent of the Admiralty or War Office, as the case may be, should be lodged with the papers. Horwood & Sons.

Aircraft Insurance.

[To the Editor of the Solicitors' Journal and Weekly Reporter.]

Sir,—Some landlords apparently recognise that it is doubtful whether the ordinary covenant to repair in a lease covers damage by enemy aircraft, but some of the large freeholders in London have, I understand, called upon their tenants to insure against this risk, and it would be very desirable if the question of liability could be settled. I think, therefore, the subject might very usefully be ventilated in your columns. SUBSCRIBER.

Aliens Restriction Order.

[To the Editor of the Solicitors' Journal and Weekly Reporter.]

Sir,—Referring to this order at p. 414 (ante), can you or any reader refer me to any case under paragraph 3 which shews whether a register has to be kept by an occupier of a house, who lets part as furnished apartments, but not to aliens; whether, if so, notice under paragraph 3 (2) has to be given to the registration officer, and where the Secretary of State's regulations, if any, can be found. G.

[The regulation in question, which will also be found in Manual of Emergency Legislation, Supplement No. 3, pp. 247, 637, appears to apply to the case where an occupier of a house lets a portion as furnished apartments, but he is only bound to keep a register of aliens. To comply with the Order he must ascertain as to all persons occupying the apartments, whether they are aliens or not, and if he has no aliens in the house he appears to be under no obligation to make any return. We do not find that any regulations under the paragraph have been published in the London Gazette, but the proper course, in order to ensure safety, is to make inquiry of the local Police Superintendent. We doubt whether there has been any case on the point.—Ed. S. J.]

Trade Unions and Actions of Tort.

[To the Editor of the Solicitors' Journal and Weekly Reporter.]

Sir,—I notice in the article which appears in your valuable journal of the 28th ult., under the heading "The Limits of a Trade Union's Privilege," after referring to an Act of 1906 (which I presume is the Trade Disputes Act, 1906), you state (referring to this Act), "The latter Act conferred on unions a limited protection against actions in tort brought by outsiders." Was it not finally settled by the House of Lords in Vacher v. London Society of Compositors (1913) (I have not the case by me to give the exact reference) that section 4, sub-section (1) of this Act means that no action of tort whatsoever can be maintained against a trade union, and that there is no limitation on this privilege of any kind?

HANDLE J. EVANS.

12, Queen-square, Wolverhampton, Sept. 8.

[Vacher's case is reported, 1913, A. C. 107. As our correspondent says, it affirms the unlimited nature of the protection afforded to trade unions by section 4 (1) of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906. Probably the writer of the article was thinking of the exception introduced by sub-section 2 as regards the liability of trustees of a trade union under the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 9.—Ed. S. J.]

New Orders, &c.

War Orders and Proclamations, &c.

The London Gazette of 7th September contains the following:—

An Admiralty Notice to Mariners (No. 777 of the year 1915), dated 3rd September, cancelling the recent Notice (No. 758 of 1915, dated 28th August), and repeating it, with amendments to sub-section 1 of section III., and the addition of subsection 2 to section III. The Notice contains instructions under the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Regulations for pilotage and regulation of traffic in the English Channel, North Sea, and Rivers Thames and Medway.

The Ministry of Munitions.

The work of the Ministry of Munitions, says the Times, grows in volume, and a very large staff is now engaged in the new department. Extensive temporary buildings have been erected in the gardens adjoining the Embankment, and it is understood that the building in Whitehall Gardens at present occupied by the Crown Agents for the Colonies is to be taken over.

The problem of finding a sufficient number of skilled men to turn out the vast quantities of munitions now required remains an urgent one, and it will probably be found that when the new factories now being built are ready the number of experienced workers available will be insufficient unless the trade union restrictions upon output are more genuinely relaxed. The rule which limits the number of machines a skilled mechanic may mind is giving some trouble. It is well known that the number could be increased, but there is apparently some fear that if a change is once made the employers will not consent to a return to the old system after the war. The employment of women is another matter which has yet to be vigorously dealt with. Female labour is not being employed at the present moment to the extent which is possible and which will probably become necessary.

Good service continues to be given by the amateur workers of the Volunteer Munitions Brigade. It has been found possible to employ more than 3,000 at week-ends at Woolwich or in other parts of the metropolitan district.

The Times states that it is informed that no political significance is to be attached to that notice of discharge has been given to a considerable number of the staff of the Land Valuation Department. Before the war there were upwards of 4,000 temporary members of the valuation staff whose engagement was subject to a month's notice. About 97 per cent. of the valuations have already been made, and it is obvious that as the valuation approaches completion the staff becomes redundant. Provision was made in the estimates for the current financial year for a reduction of 1,700 members of the temporary staff, representing a saving of £123,000. The reduction of the temporary staff is an automatic process, and is, moreover, in pursuance of an undertaking given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the House of Commons on 29th June.

Law Students' Journal.

The Law Society.

The third term of the year will commence on Monday next, the 13th instant, on which and the following day the Principal will be in his room for the purpose of seeing students who desire to enter their names. Lectures and classes will commence on Monday, the 13th. The subjects to be dealt with will be, for Final students (i) Real Property and Conveyancing (the Principal), (ii) Bankruptcy and Winding-up of Companies (Dr. Burgin), and (iii) Companies, other than Winding-up (Mr. McNair); and, for Intermediate students, (i) Public Rights (Mr. Baynes), (ii) Civil Injuries (Dr. Burgin), and (iii) Outline of Accounts and Book-keeping (Professor Dicksee). The degree course on Constitutional Law (the Principal) will be continued from last term; and a course on the Introduction to Stephen's Commentaries (Mr. Baynes) will be held for students qualifying under the exemption order.

Copies of the prospectus and time-table can be obtained on application to the society's office.

Gentlemen wishing to qualify under the exemption order should communicate with the Principal not later than the first day of term.

Obituary.

Mr. Alexander P. Turnbull.

Second Lieutenant Alexander Phipps Turnbull, 10th Australian Light Horse, was the eldest son of Mr. A. P. Turnbull, of Alexander River, Western Australia. Born in 1888, he was educated at the Perth High School, where he gained many prizes and distinguished himself at games. In 1907 he was chosen Rhodes scholar, and proceeded to Merton College, Oxford. While at the University he belonged to the King's Colonials, and took an active part in cricket, rowing, and football. In 1910 he was one of three in the First Class of the Final Honours School in Law and Jurisprudence. After reading for a year in the offices of Messrs. Bristows, Cooke, & Carmichael, he was called to the Bar, and returned to Perth to practise. When the war broke out he joined the 10th Light Horse, subsequently becoming corporal, sergeant, and second lieutenant, and was killed in the recent operations at the Dardanelles.

Mr. Leo E. Davis.

Second Lieutenant Leo Edwin Davis, 5th Manchester Regiment (T.F.), the only son of Mr. Herbert J. Davis, solicitor, of Liverpool, is reported "missing, believed killed" at the Dardanelles. He was educated at Greenbank, and then at Liverpool College. He was a member of the Officers Training Corps, and held a commission in the Liverpool (King's) Cadet Battalion. He spent some time in France and Germany, and afterwards became articled to his father. He was twenty years old last March.

Mr. Edmund Spencer Turton.

Lieutenant Edmund Spencer Turton, B Squadron, Yorkshire Hussars, who was killed in Flanders on 1st September, aged twenty-six years, was the only child of Mr. Edmund Russborough Turton, M.P., of Upsall Castle, Thirsk, and grandson of the Right Hon. Sir S. Ponsonby-Fane, G.C.B. He was educated at Cheam and Eton, being captain of the Oppidans in the summer half of 1908. Going up to Balliol, he took Honour Moderations and the Final School of Law, and called to the Bar in 1912. While at Oxford he received a commission in the Yorkshire Hussars. Last February he went to the front with his squadron. The War Office had just arranged for him to return to England, with the temporary rank of captain, to assist Lord Feversham in raising the Farmers' Infantry Battalion in Yorkshire. The transfer was, at his own request, delayed for a week so that he might obtain experience of active trench warfare. When he met his death he was temporarily attached to a battalion of the Sherwood Foresters.

Mr. Warren E. Hertslet.

Lieutenant Warren Eccles Hertslet, 10th London Regiment (Hackney), who was killed at the Dardanelles on 15th August, aged thirty-six, was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hertslet, of Harestone, Margate. Lieutenant Hertslet, who was married, was admitted as a solicitor in 1901.

Writing to the Times of the 9th inst. from the Temple, "Kim" says: It is a source of great inconvenience that the daily Cause Lists which are being published during the vacation are incomplete and therefore misleading. Some weeks ago there was a sitting of the Court of Criminal Appeal, but it was not announced in the Cause List for the day. The Prize Court sat on Thursday last and the public were kept in ignorance. Mr. Justice Bray delivered a judgment yesterday which you report this morning, but again there was no official notice in the daily list. May one hope that the delivery of an impending judgment of international importance will be announced in the list for the day, if not in advance?

ERNEST THEODORE SMITH and DOUGLAS WALTER MONEY, solicitors (W. H. Smith & Son), 265, Gresham-house, London, E.C. Sept. 1. [Gazette, Sept. 3.]

WALTER MIDGLEY and EDWARD PEEL CROSS, solicitors (Baratow, Midgley, & Cross), 1, Princes-street, Harrogate, in the county of York. Dec. 31, 1914. The said Walter Midgley will continue to practise on his own account, under the style or firm of Baratow & Midgley, and the said Edward Peel Cross will continue to practise on his own account under the style or firm of Baratow, Midgley, & Cross.

THOMAS MARK MERRIMAN, EDWIN HARRIS THIRLBY, and MARK MARSHALL MERRIMAN, solicitors (Merriman & Thirlby), 3, Mitre-court, Temple, E.C., by the retirement of the said Edwin Harris Thirlby, as and from August 31. The said Thomas Mark Merriman and Mark Marshall Merriman will continue to carry on the said business under the style or firm of Merrimans.

HENRY SEYMOUR METCALFE and JAMES FREDERICK HAY, solicitors (Metcalf, Sharpe, & Hay), at 40, Chancery-lane, London, E.C. Sept. 1. [Gazette, Sept. 7.]

General.

According to the Deutsche Juristenzeitung, 1,964 German lawyers had been killed up to 26th August, among them being 10 professors of law; 414 high administrative officials and judges, 1,176 minor judges, and 365 solicitors.

A Shoreditch warehouseman was, at the Tower Bridge Police-court on 2nd instant, fined £10 for stealing a quantity of cap leathers. Evidence was given that he attempted to bribe a detective by giving him £6, but the prisoner denied this, a denial which the magistrate declined to believe. The Detective: What shall I do with the £6? The Magistrate: See if he claims it. The Clerk: As he denies paying it he can hardly claim it.

The Rev. Henry George Woods, D.D., Master of the Temple, President of Trinity College, Oxford, 1887-97, and rector of Little Gaddesden, Herts, 1900-4, who died on 19th July, aged 73, left unsettled estate valued at £10,943 gross, with net personally £10,868. The testator left to the Hon. Societies of the Inner and Middle Temple his collection of portraits of Masters of the Temple, to be kept and preserved, and not sold, hoping they will be kept permanently in the Master's House, for the use and enjoyment of the successive Masters.

At the conclusion of the sitting of the Guildhall Juvenile Court last week, says the Times, Mr. Alderman Hanson made some observations on the evil influences of certain scenes at some of the picture palaces. He said: "We have had this afternoon three or four cases in which reference has been made to picture palaces and their most pernicious influence on the minds of young children. Fathers and mothers seem to think it a harmless thing—and it may be in some instances—to take their children to see these pictures, but in the cases that have come before me it has been shewn that most objectionable scenes have been put upon the screen. Crime has been, apparently, condoned, and at any rate the effect has been to encourage imitation. In the case of a young boy charged here this afternoon, he had seen the representation of a forgery committed by an individual who got the benefit of his crime and escaped punishment. This boy, who was employed in the City, was induced to go and do the very same thing. There is hardly a Juvenile Court held where instances of this sort are not mentioned. I do not say for one moment that there is any design or intention on the part of those who are responsible for these exhibitions to do or to encourage wrong, but I doubt whether there is such care taken as there should be in their supervision."

The public are cautioned to be sure of obtaining the genuine "Oxford" Sectional Bookcase, as exhibited at "Ideal Homes" and other exhibitions, particulars of which may be obtained free from the sole inventors and manufacturers, William Baker & Co., Oxford. Avoid imitations, which, although similar in name and general appearance, are quite differently constructed, of inferior finish, and more expensive. The "Oxford" is only genuine when connected with the name of WILLIAM BAKER & Co.—(Adv't.)
